To ensure the safety and wellbeing of children and young people NSW Health employees have the responsibility to report children at risk of harm to the Department of Community Services.

This service provides support, counselling and information to children, young people and non-offending carers.

This service provides a 24hr crisis service and ongoing counselling.

The aim of counselling is to assist children, young people and families to challenge the effects of sexual abuse.

This service is available to males and females.

This service is free and confidential.
The child/young person is never to blame.

Sexual assault is a serious crime.

Sexual assault includes any action in which someone is forced, tricked or threatened into sexual acts.

Sexual assault includes someone touching your genitals or breasts or asks you to touch their genitals.

Sexual assault includes someone wanting to look at you undressed and/or expose their genitals.

The service can provide:

- Counselling for children, young people and carers
- Support for non–offending family members
- Group work for children, young people and carers
- Community education
- Consultation with agencies and the community regarding dynamics of sexual assault
- Information regarding child sexual assault issues, effects, common responses and recovery process
- Court preparation and court support.
- Facilitation and access to appropriate health care

Counselling includes play, art and activities as well as talking. Children who have used the service have said that talking to someone has been helpful. Some of the things children have learnt in counselling:

- “It was not my fault”
- “There is nothing wrong with me”
- “Sexual assault is wrong and I’m not to blame”
- “Sexual assault happens to other kids”
- “It’s ok to talk about it”
- “I have been brave to tell someone”
- “I feel better and stronger talking about it”
